DREAMS AND DREAMING.

REMARKABLE PREMONITION.

One of the most remarkable items of information in the present month has been the evidence given at the inquest on the Rainhill murders as to the revelation of the perpetration of the crime. According to the statement made by Mr. Alfred Denyer at the inquest, he was prepared for the horrible discovery of the bodies of his relatives, owing to the fact that he had seen their bodies in a dream about the time the murder was committed. This evidence, given on oath, naturally created a profound sensation in the court, and may probably lead to considerable discussion of prophetic dreams.

A South African Dream.

Of these I have in my wallet considerable store. One of the most remarkable of them reached me from South Africa in the course of the month. It is as follows:—Dear Sir,—I shall be glad if you will kindly allow me to state a few indisputable facts in relation to dreams that have proved true for you, for you will, I am sure, remember the large consistency of readers generally, and especially those of a psychological nature. The facts are these:—The Rev. Chas. Denyer, Baptist minister at Craiova, and president for last year of the Baptist Union in South Africa, died suddenly in the street while attending to his pastoral duties on Saturday morning, the 23rd May, 1891. Mr. Denyer had been a student in the Rev. Mr. Guinness's College, England, was about 34 years of age, and one of the most devout and useful pastors in this colony. He has left a widow and four dear little children to mourn his loss, but I am thankful to say that a very handsome sum of money has been raised for the assistance of the family of our beloved brother. The town in which I live and labor is nearly three hundred miles away from Craiova. In my church I have a brother of the late Mr. Denyer, a young man, 25 years of age. His name is James Denyer, and he is employed as overseer on the floors of the De Beers Mining Company, Limited. Mr. James Denyer is a strong, healthy, young man of unimpeachable character. James was working on the night shift the week that his Rev. brother died.

First Dream.

On Thursday morning, May 21st, and between 7 and 9 o'clock, he dreamt that he was in the drawing-room of his deceased brother, which room is on the left-hand side of the lobby and near the front door, and while there he heard something of the nature of the heavy footsteps of men. He went out in the lobby, and there saw a number of men bearing on a stretcher a dead man, whom he recognized to be his brother.

Second Dream.

On the morning of Friday, May 22nd, he dreamt the same thing with this addition, that he went into the brother's study, which was on the other side of the lobby, with his door directly opposite the drawing-room, and there in the study he saw his brother in his coffin.

Third Dream.

On Saturday morning, the very day that his beloved brother died, he dreamt that there were thousands of people in front of his brother's house—that a funeral proceeded from the house, that the Rev. Mr. Denyer, the mourners following, that they proceeded to the church, where a service was conducted, and thence to the graveyard, which graveyard he recognized. In the afternoon of the same day Mr. James Denyer had to return to his duties on the floors. While there, a foreman, R. Archibald Beay, who had married the first cousin of the wife of the late Rev. Charles Denyer, needed a telegram informing him of the sad fact of the sudden death of the deceased Rev. Denyer that morning about 10.30, and requesting him to break the news to the brother of the deceased. When the district manager arrived Mr. Archibald was in the act of paying the men in his department, and therefore could not go and break the sad news to Mr. James Denyer. He sent one of his subordinate officers in his conference to make known the fact that his brother was dead. As this messenger drove up to the place where Mr. James Denyer was employed, the latter came away

MRS. JONES' BURGLAR.

"The papers say that burglars are thicker than blackberries in these times," said Mr. Jones, looking up from his newspaper with a troubled frown. "All I've got to say," remarked Mrs. Jones, "is, don't be out late at night. You know, Joseph, they'll get you if you don't watch out."

"Think you're kidding, don't you, Maria?" snapped Mr. Jones; "they'll be more likely to get you. Don't call me for help when a man with a mask on holds a pistol to your head, and asks you where you keep the silver?" "Don't talk so," reproverated Mrs. Jones. "I'll keep the door up, and the silver safe locked, and with the dog in the house, and the house as tight as a drum, and he had dreamt; thousands did at the funeral; a service was held in the church; he was the only member of the family who followed the corpse to the grave, and it was the same grave-yard that he saw in his dreams. In fact, the whole series of events corresponded exactly to the vision of the surviving brother. These dreams were actually made known before he had heard of the death of his brother. Moreover, he had not heard from his deceased brother for more than a month, and had not the slightest reason to suppose that he would live for many years. He was, in fact, a man who had been a young man in still in his prime, and in the employ of the powerful and generous company known as the De Beers Company, and as your Review of 25th June extensively refers here I am sure you will remember to believe that what I have stated is literally true. I have made these facts known from my own pulpit to a crowded congregation.

A Reasonable Inference.

Now, Sir, what is the meaning of this? Certainly neither a disorganized stomach nor a disordered liver, or any such dream, is the cause of a science which we have greatly neglected, and are there not voices from the other side of the veil which have been culpably neglected?—Believe me, dear Sir, very truly yours, James Hutcheson, Baptist Minister, Kimberley, South Africa, Feb. 6th.

Mr. Lang's Ghost Story.

In Langman's Magazine, in "At the Sign of the Ship," Mr. Andrew Lang tells the following ghost story:—Talking of St. Andrews leads the mind to Archbishop Sharpe and Waldron's story of St. Andrew's. The prelate was at Edinburgh; he was reading a document in his desk at St. Andrew's (he had a house near the harbour; only a gateway survives), and he sent his remaining footman to bring the paper. The man came in six hours, arriving at the house at four in the afternoon; the paper is excellent, but, in the "A Bide of Lammerton," Scott gives an account of the great spread and entrance of these attacks. As he entered the Archbishop's study, the footman saw the prelate sitting at the bureau which contained the paper. "You have ridden fast my lord; I did see you on the road," said the servant. The appearance arose, and moved out of the room. The man called the steward, and left saw the Archbishop standing with a forbidding countenance, at the top of the stairs, whence he disappeared. It is a very good instance of a "wraith" or "apparition of the living." The ingenious Mr. Stead, whose historical ghosts are carefully handled, should consult Waldron's "Anecdotes," where the tale occurs. The house of the Archbishop, by the way, was haunted, according to a letter which Woodrow received from another minister and a later archbishop, investigating the case, and that the only family who remained following, that they proceeded to the church, where a service was conducted, and thence to the graveyard, which graveyard he recognized. In the afternoon of the same day Mr. James Denyer had to return to his duties on the floors. While there, a foreman, R. Archibald Beay, who had married the first cousin of the wife of the late Rev. Charles Denyer, needed a telegram informing him of the sad fact of the sudden death of the deceased Rev. Denyer that morning about 10.30, and requesting him to break the news to the brother of the deceased. When the district manager arrived Mr. Archibald was in the act of paying the men in his department, and therefore could not go and break the sad news to Mr. James Denyer. He sent one of his subordinate officers in his conference to make known the fact that his brother was dead. As this messenger drove up to the place where Mr. James Denyer was employed, the latter came away

THINGS WELL SAID.

"Courageous, intelligent, persistent, advertising means the largest possible success in the most favorable way." "People won't and can't guess that you have a good thing." "He who in the world would rise, must either fall or advance." "Non-advertising means the limitation of business to personal influence." "Change is the only constant." "Don't get into a rat. Have some vim."
