NORTH POLAR EXPLORATION.

DR NANSEN'S EXPEDITION. It is reported that Dr. Nansen and his party, who left Norway on 21st June, on their expedition to the North Pole, in a vessel specially constructed for the purpose, have been seen by the Kara Sea, between Siberia and Nova Zembla.

Dr. Nansen proposed to reach the North Pole a number of miles before the expedition was to be abandoned. He believed that this was desirable for the purpose of securing the necessary supplies for the return journey.

Dr. Nansen's expedition is one of the most important of the present time. It is expected that it will result in the discovery of new lands and the opening up of new routes to the North Pole.

THE PATTERSON GOVERNMENT.

ITS SINS OF OMISSION AND COMMISSION. [TO THE EDITOR.] Sir,—At the last general election I thought that a gentleman possessing sound views (he having promised to support the Home Rule programme) and contending the Home Rule cause, would be elected to the House of Commons.

It is a pity that the Home Rule cause has not been more successful. The Government have not done enough to support the cause, and the Opposition have not done enough to oppose it.

The Government have not done enough to support the cause, and the Opposition have not done enough to oppose it. The Home Rule cause is still a long way from being successful.

BY MARY ANNE DEGENS AND BY MARY ANNE MOULDER

THEY were sitting at the table, the coffee cups empty, the plates clean, the room dimly lit by the fire in the grate. It was a quiet moment, a moment of rest after a day of busy work.

She looked at him, her eyes full of a sadness that she tried to hide. He noticed it, of course, but he said nothing. He knew she was thinking of the past, of the days when life was simpler and more certain.

He reached for her hand, his fingers brushing hers. She looked down at their joined hands, feeling a sense of comfort and security. He was her anchor, her rock in a stormy sea.

The fire crackled in the grate, casting a warm glow over the room. She looked up at him, her eyes meeting his. There was a moment of silence, a moment of understanding.

It was a simple life, but it was a life worth living. They had each other, and that was all they needed.

to stay with her. Come, Marion, she seemed only the natural result of the tempest which had blown over her. She was a young girl, full of life and hope, but the world was cruel to her.

He looked at her, his face a mask of pain. He knew she was suffering, but he had no words to comfort her. He was a man of few words, and his heart was heavy with the burden of the world.

She turned to him, her eyes full of tears. He reached for her, his hands trembling. She felt a sense of peace, a sense of being loved and cared for. He was her strength, her light in the darkness.

He looked at her, his eyes full of a love that was deep and true. She was his life, his everything. He would do anything for her, anything to make her happy and content.

The night was quiet, the stars shining brightly in the dark sky. They were alone, in a world that was so full of pain and suffering. But for them, it was a world of love and hope.

He looked at her, his eyes full of a love that was deep and true. She was his life, his everything. He would do anything for her, anything to make her happy and content.

AN IRONY OF FATE.

Mr. John O'Connell had been married, and he was a very happy man. He had a beautiful wife and three children. He was a successful businessman and was well respected in the community.

One day he was walking through the park, and he saw a young girl sitting on a bench. She was crying, and he went over to her. He asked her what was wrong, and she told him that she was lost.

He took her home with him, and he found out that she was the daughter of a friend of his. He was very kind to her, and she was very grateful to him. He was a very good man, and he was very kind to everyone.
