AGRICULTURAL COLUMN.

Butter-Making. The following is the text of a lecture by Mr. J. D. James, Superintendent of the N.S.W. Agricultural School at St. Hyacinthe, New South Wales.

The art of butter-making is governed by a series of conditions, and the object of the student is to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

Cheap and Effective Tree Guards.

It is astonishing how much damage two or three rabbits can do to a young orchard in a few weeks. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

ABSOLUTELY PURE, BEST. COCOA. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

Hints to Irrigators. Different kinds of soil require different methods of irrigation. A person who has everything to learn over again if he were to start over again.

JAMES MUNDAYS. MELBOURNE, WAREHOUSE & DYNO'S-BUILDINGS. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

THE UNION. CURES RHEUMATISM, GOUT, BRUISES, SWELLINGS, AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE JOINTS. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

SOAPENE. THE BEST AND CHEAPEST. CLEANSER IN THE MARKET. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

NATIONAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSOCIATION. THE HEAD OFFICE, MELBOURNE. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

VISITORS TO MELBOURNE.

Should call at the following places: A. A. WALKER, 101, Victoria Street. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

ALAN and Co., 111, Collins Street. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

THE EQUITY TRUSTEES EXECUTORS AND AGENCY COMPANY LIMITED. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

SKINS, TENTS, HIDES. THOMAS EVANS, AUSTRALIAN TANNING AND TARPULIN. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

WELCH, PERRIN AND CO., Agricultural and Machinery. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

THE NURSERY STORE LTD., Wholesale and Retail Nurseries. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

MOLLER'S COD LIVER OIL. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

MESSRS. LAWSON & SWAIN, Monumental and General Marble. The student should be able to make butter, but to make it always of the best quality, to give it invariably the same taste, and to make it as profitable as possible.

NORTHCOTE TOWN COUNCIL.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15TH. Present:—Crs. Hutton (mayor), McLean, Bagley, Dennis, Candy, Bockley, Williams, Barrow, Frank, Thompson and Marks.

The Mayor apologized for the absence of Cr. Smith, who was unwell. The Council resolved to adjourn until the 22nd inst.

A SKETCH OF AUSTRALIAN LIFE.

By VIOLA DUMAS.

I am the happy possessor of a baby not at all a startling fact, kind reader...

But my baby differs from these children also! She is not a baby, she should have been dead, their grave she should have been...

Less than twelve months before my story opens a merry bridal party met in Christ's Church, Beeworth...

The ceremony is over and in the vestry my sister is laughing merrily. The minister had used her name without discovering it...

I am afraid my mother is already considered hopeless, for I hear her whisper to a lady who tells her how thankful she ought to feel...

One morning a telegram arrived announcing the arrival of a little daughter, quickly followed by another...

I need not describe my journey to Melbourne. I darsay many of my readers have had one such journey...

My brother-in-law, frantic with grief at his loss, and unable to bear the sight of the home where he had such brief happiness...

LITTLE AUNT DOROTHY.

A SKETCH OF AUSTRALIAN LIFE.

By Viola Dewar.

CHAPTER III.—Reviews.

The New Year has opened and I am myself again—apparently so at least—but there is a subtle change in my feelings, due to a heartache and the loss of my girlhood. My woman's heart has been found only to pass from my keeping to another. Baby and I have still our hours of play, but my feet move more slowly and my laugh has lost its merry ring. My brother has spoken to me of Maurice. He is disappointed in my decision, but understands that my life is leading and that baby cannot be left alone. He praises my self-sacrifice, but makes me miserable when he talks of Maurice, and tells me how completely his disapproval of my decision has bitten him. That is the worst part of my trial. I have so much to endure my attention for Maurice is so exacting that every minute seems occupied—it is impossible to lounge about and let Maurice's glances wander and have such a merry laugh, and his "Mummy" then my mother and George are so tender and loving to me. Maurice is alone with me and I turn to him for comfort. Thus I torment myself by thinking of the future, and the news of his departure for Europe is a relief, for he has the change of scene and the excitement of a hard study will be the best comfort he can have. His parting words to George were "Tell Dorothy that my mother and I shall never forget her," and gave her a packet of letters and a book of prayers, and she said every day for ourselves and our people. Our initials are inside the ring and the date of "Mrs. Eve," so no doubt it will be a comfort to our engagement. Inside the packet was just one line, "Will this tell me what you are doing?"

It was not allowed much time for mourning for Maurice, and as my business is required of me. Our man of business, Mr. McDonald, is missing, and strange things are said of his affairs. The usual quarterly cheque has been delayed, but it was supposed to be in Melbourne, and as we awaited his return. He body was found in his office at last, and a medical man called in hastily gave me his opinion that the deceased had taken poison and had taken in the position he was found in at least a week. The poor fellow corroborated the fact and the lady's remark was "I am evidently self-administered." That was all. Poor Broom! I could not look upon the man he had loved, or face the friends he had loved, and he was taken away by the fascination of speculation he had invented trust money and the prospect of increased wealth and the prospect of increased wealth and the prospect of increased wealth. My father had been a doctor by profession and had a large practice in London, but a severe cold, caught on one of his visits paid on his wife's winter night, settled on his lungs and the medical men he consulted strongly advised immediate change to a warmer climate as the best means of prolonging his life. He was a doctor, and his friends who had visited Victoria recommended that colony as the best place for a time at all, and he was a great trial to leave home, friends, and the prospect of increased wealth and the prospect of increased wealth. The poor fellow corroborated the fact and the lady's remark was "I am evidently self-administered." That was all. Poor Broom! I could not look upon the man he had loved, or face the friends he had loved, and he was taken away by the fascination of speculation he had invented trust money and the prospect of increased wealth and the prospect of increased wealth. My father had been a doctor by profession and had a large practice in London, but a severe cold, caught on one of his visits paid on his wife's winter night, settled on his lungs and the medical men he consulted strongly advised immediate change to a warmer climate as the best means of prolonging his life. He was a doctor, and his friends who had visited Victoria recommended that colony as the best place for a time at all, and he was a great trial to leave home, friends, and the prospect of increased wealth and the prospect of increased wealth.

It was not allowed much time for mourning for Maurice, and as my business is required of me. Our man of business, Mr. McDonald, is missing, and strange things are said of his affairs. The usual quarterly cheque has been delayed, but it was supposed to be in Melbourne, and as we awaited his return. He body was found in his office at last, and a medical man called in hastily gave me his opinion that the deceased had taken poison and had taken in the position he was found in at least a week.
