An astonishing submarine boat has been invented by the late John S. Parsons of New York, who at present resides in the city of New York. The building of this marvellous device was completed in the workshop of the inventor, "The Tribune" publishes a detailed description of it in its issue of August 22nd.

The apparatus consists of a cylinder of polished steel about thirty inches in diameter and eight feet in length tapering in seaward until it is about six inches in diameter at the end. Around the cylinder from end to end are attached a series of steel bands, and the interior is filled with compressed air. The surface of the cylinder is covered with a thin layer of oil, which serves to prevent the water from entering. The cylinder is supported by a series of floats, and is capable of moving in any direction. The inventor claims that it is capable of moving at the rate of ten miles an hour, and is capable of remaining submerged for a period of several days.
