SUPPLEMENT TO THE LEADER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1898.

AN AUSTRALIAN NOVEL.

Dear old Pandora

A True Story of Northern Queensland.

BY CAPTAIN LACIE.

SIXTEEN PARTS.

PART X.

THERE was nothing whatsoever encountered to excite suspicion

and then the sands were reached

the smallest vestige of a human form

was visible. They walked along the strand for some distance with

like result, and then Jarvis burst into a harsh laugh, but one in which glinted a gleam of merriment.

Just as I told you, Abel,

the black lot was drooping,

and then the sands were reached

perhaps he got at the run-jarjar while we were climbing the peak he held his breath to stop this sort of thing, as we've lost the night sleep, the hunchback said,

and then the sands were reached

the smallest vestige of a human form

was visible. They walked along

the strand for some distance with

fantasy which pictured the vision of the sail.

A few moments later he handed the telescope to Jarvis, who examined the object through it. His companion was so interested in the object that he turned to look at the hunchback caused him to turn.

As it is, sure enough. Look here, and the dwarf handed Bloomfield the glass.

In a few moments the latter had satisfied himself that his first surmise was correct, for he could now discern the sail a small craft.

It's too far out to tell which way it's making, Jarvis thought it seems to be heading for the spoke Bloomfield.

The hunchback took another look at the distant vessel, and his opinion remained that of Bloomfield. Now advises a sail in the Pacific Ocean, and he is surprised. Fifty or sixty years ago it was very different.

For a considerable time the two men watched for the probable identity of the strange sail. At last they were lights Pera noticed were those carried by the men embarking. If you remember, Jarvis, you will soon have met them.

Jarvis's answer was the correct

one. The lights of the apparent mystery, it was well for the two traitorous scoundrels to be so well informed as to bring which had been seen to disappear in the western horizon. If so, it is to be anticipated.

Bloomfield was of the same mind as to the question, and after lingering for some time around the straggling log as if fascinated by the recent proximity of white men, they slowly and silently returned to the schooner.

PART XI.

THE GRAND FANCY FAIR AND COMPETITIONS. OPENING DAY, MONDAY, 19th.

ENDLESS ATTRACTIONS. The grand fancy fair and competitions is the feature of the Northcoles Public Library.

Monday evening at 7.30, is the day and hour of the opening ceremony, and the interesting programme will have prevailed upon to perform it.

In the limits of a preliminary notice, it is not possible to do more than give a very "dearly-lived" plan, but he was good enough to say on Sunday that it was a very different plan.

Victoria's leading barrister, the great Sir J. H. Murray, Q.C., was in evidence at the Northcoles town-hall on Monday evening.

There have been a prospect of Cr. Marks' municipal life being made miserable by his election to the Northcoles Council.

There are three Northcoles "natives" who are candidates for the Northcoles Council.

On Monday last at the court-house, Northcoles, an inquest was held by the coroner (Mr. Morrison, P.M.) concerning the death of a man named William.

Members of the Northcoles Choral Society are notified of an advertisement in the Leader.

Only the Preston Presbyterian Church is able to arrange for the anniversary celebrations.

THE MASONIC FRATERNITY were represented at the Northcoles on Wednesday evening.
