THE CAPE TO CAIRO RAILWAY.

In the "Wider" for this month there is an article by Mr. W. T. Stead on the Cape to Cairo Railway, illustrated by a map of the route and photographs of its construction.

A DAEMONIC DESIGN.

He begins by recalling a significant remark of Her Rothemann, financial adviser to Mr. de Witte, when he met last year in St. Petersburg. Speaking of the great Siberian railway, he said: "The railway, like many others of the same nature, is being built under the compulsion of an impulse or an instinct which it is impossible to justify on financial, political, or military grounds."

This suggests the question:—If it be the case with the Siberian railway, what can be said of the Cape to Cairo line, but that it is still more striking illustration of Her Rothemann's doctrine? From a political point of view the British Empire will profit more than Russia by the building of the Asiatic through-railway over which in a few years will pass all the mails between England and Africa and dependencies in the Pacific.

From every point of view the construction of the line across Siberia is more important to the English-speaking world than the Cape to Cairo railway. To shorten the time in which one can travel round the planet from sixty-five to thirty-three days is an achievement of supreme value to the only race which has divided its families all over the world. When the Siberian line is built, Shanghai, which is now thirty-five days distant from London, will only be divided by a fortnight from the General Post Office in St. Martin's-le-Grand.

THE AFRICAN KINGDOMS IN TIME.—The Cape to Cairo railway offers all the advantages of the British Empire that the Russians are securing for by building their line across Siberia. It will not materially shorten the distance between London and the Cape, but it will materially shorten the distance between London and the Cape, and it will materially shorten the distance between London and the Cape.

Still less is it likely to be fertile of dividends. It would cost possibly twenty millions sterling to construct. It is an extremely doubtful whether it would ever pay a dividend. It is not likely to be fertile of dividends. It would cost possibly twenty millions sterling to construct. It is an extremely doubtful whether it would ever pay a dividend.

THE WIRE BEFORE THE RAIL.—His first step to the construction of the railway was to set about laying an underland telegraph from the Cape to Cairo. His appeal for funds fell upon deaf ears, and he resolved, finding other help, to find the money himself. He has, in fact, had to find nine-tenths of the money personally.

THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT FOR THE CAPE TO CAIRO RAILWAY.

Mr. Stead sketches the remainder of the route in an article by Mr. W. T. Stead on the Cape to Cairo Railway, illustrated by a map of the route and photographs of its construction.

At leaving German territory the telegraph line will make its way to Mengi, in Uganda, and then, avoiding the dangerous valley of the Nile between Lake Albert and Khartoum, it will traverse the edge of the plateau that abuts the frontier of Abyssinia and make a junction with the Anglo-Egyptian system on the frontier of the Sudan. With the exception of the 700 miles of German territory, the whole distance from Cape to Cairo is already covered. That distance may be reduced to 400 miles, if the beginning of German territory is reckoned at the north end of Tanganyika instead of the south. England has a right of way for 1,000 miles, so that in reality, of the 6,000 miles which stretch between Cape and Cairo, the British Empire need only for 300 miles stretch of the line, protecting the whole of the United Kingdom.
