WITHIN AN INCH OF MY LIFE A Terrible Experience.

By R. W. The thrilling story of the equatorial sea...

With a crew of twelve men, I was on the equatorial sea...

It was a terrible experience, one that I shall never forget...

The deck of our ship, the Minerva, reflected the heat with the intensity of an oven...

As we made for a large cooling black tenting from the rigging...

It was a relief, but the heat was still there...

The day previous, while on shore leave, I had intrusted to a native...

It was a relief, but the heat was still there...

The second mate, a young man, sprang into my cabin...

I looked the best of my exorable manner, and he said...

World I sacrifice that last—that example of the wearer's art...

My last thought was to call to mind the words of the poet...

My last thought was to call to mind the words of the poet...
