CHAPTER XIV.

The Verkerks still lingered at Bay Cottage. Muriel, having succeeded in poisoning her husband's mind against her cousin and gratifying her spite of his rejection of her advances, was now full of self-reproach—

CHAPTER XV.

A New Chord Struck.

The slow hours dragged on and Muriel began to fret anxiously for Robert's return.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Good East.

The walls of the long low room were hung with alabaster tapestries, brilliant with the glowing coloring of the East.

CHAPTER XVII.

Politeness Rebuked.

An old lady who had been leaning over the rail to watch the passengers as they came up the gangway suddenly approached the captain.

CHAPTER XVIII.

What Did he want?

"What did he want?" she asked, looking after the man who had been seen at the door.

"You lover stung him," said he with a strange smile.

"There is a girl in the kitchen called Bridget Slattery."

"What can I do for you?" he asked.

"I want you to look for me, never come back, sir."

"Who is she?"

"I don't know, but she is a very nice girl."

NORTHCOLE RIFLE CLUB.
MINIATURE RANGE OPENED.

For several months past, whenever opportunity occurred, the more enthusiastic members of the newly formed Northcole Rifle Club have been busy engaged in erecting a miniature rifle range on land generously placed at their disposal by the Northcole town council. The mechanical skill, constructive ability, and brains of members is amply illustrated in the excellent range they have erected, which reflects the greatest credit on those who carried out the work. It is equal, if not superior, to anything of the kind in the metropolis, and the only one of the club was that for material.

In addition to the rifle range, there is a 75 feet range, equipped with two mechanical travelling targets, which travel to and from the shooting line, and there is a positively no danger or annoyance to anyone. The range is conveniently situated in Roberts street, close to the tram line, on the east side of Hucker's hill, and will be open for practice almost every night in the week.

The opening ceremony was most successful. It attracted a large number of spectators, and the members of the club were very pleased with the result. The range is a credit to the club, and it is hoped that it will be a source of much pleasure to the members and to the public. The club has been very successful in their efforts to erect a range, and it is hoped that they will continue to improve it in the future.

Sloughing Licenses. Watson and Paterson, H. Howson, and R. Staples, writing asking that the Council inform the Central Board of Health that their licenses had been renewed.

Cr. Warr remarked that this was something new, but he would move that the information be sent on. Cr. Howson seconded.—Carried.

Frost Against Valuation. James C. Costigan (tenant) wrote stating that Mr. Sullivan had instructed him to protest against the high valuation put on his 38 acres in Gower street, which had been risen to £100 an acre.

Water for Cramer Street. F. Morgan wrote stating he intended building his Cramer street and would like the water extended to his property.

Cr. Howson moved that application be made to the Board for the extension desired. Cr. Warr seconded.—Carried.

Equivalent of License Fee. The Under-Treasurer forwarded an account for £115, being equivalent of licensing fees.—Received.

The Pipe-track. W. J. Ingles wrote requesting the Council to ask the Metropolitan Board to carry out the pipe-track at the present alignment is crooked.

Cr. Howson moved that the Board be asked to level this 24 feet at right angles instead of taking it diagonally across.—Carried.

Extension of Sewerage Area. The Metropolitan Board wrote stating that the Council's request to have the sewerage area extended to Preston Reservoir would be given further consideration in connection with the estimates.—Received.

Letting of the Hall. G. Pritchard wrote expressing surprise that the shire-hall should have been let to anybody else as he had engaged it for the football club dancers every Saturday evening from March 1.

The Outer Suburbs Tramways Conference wrote asking for reply to report of tramway conference before Monday, 6th.

Cr. Alchin moved that the letter be referred to their representative (Cr. Robertson). The ratifiers were much interested in the route recommended, but as yet they had not been informed.

Cr. Alchin moved that the letter be referred to their representative (Cr. Robertson). The ratifiers were much interested in the route recommended, but as yet they had not been informed.

Barnes v. Kerwood. Pink, Best and Hall wrote forwarding copy of the letter they had sent to the Crown Law Department re case of Barnes v. Kerwood (milk prosecution).

Seats for North Preston Reserve. W. H. Fyfe wrote suggesting that portion of the park ground be utilized in providing a few seats in the North Preston reserve, as crowds of people go up there on a Sunday afternoon and the seats would be a great convenience.

Pipe Track Roadway Extension. Eliza O'Reilly wrote asking if the Council would try and get the Metropolitan Board to extend the 24 feet roadway concession along the pipe track to her property, adjoining rear ground.

Cr. Wilkinson moved that an effort be made to get the extension desired. Cr. Howson seconded.—Carried.

EVERY-DAY ACCIDENTS. Finger Cut Open—Skin Scraped off Face.

The Chairman.—Do you favor the conversion of the cable system to electricity?

Witness:—I have not considered that question, but I believe from a traffic point of view the conversion would be desirable. It would give a quicker service all round.

What about the construction of new lines?—I think they should be electric, but I have a strong objection to poles in the centre of streets.

If the trams were electrified and extended, would the railway be able to compete at a 2d fare right through?—That would mean 4d return; the second class train fare is 3d return.

Continuing, witness said he did not think the tendency under municipal ownership would be to keep up fares, with the object of reducing the rates. Such an influence was considering the fares prior to the renewal of the lease of the local trams a few years ago. He would like to see the St. Kilda and Port Melbourne railway systems electrified by way of experiment.

In reply to Mr. Sully, he admitted that the Northcote Council was rather inconsistent in now desiring municipal control of trams, and yet leasing its own system to private individuals. The Council, however, was differently constituted now to what it was when it decided to lease the trams. He was sure that the cable system being bought from the Tramway Co. at once, at a reasonable price, rather than wait until the lease expires in 1916.

Cr. A. Robertson, president of the Preston shire, said that at one time the Council was in favor of Government control of trams, but after the municipal conference on the subject it was decided to support municipal control. Except for the representation part of the proposal, Preston was fairly well satisfied with the municipal ownership scheme. The improvement of transport system from Preston had resulted in increased population in the municipality. He thought municipalities wanted to control trams in the interests of travelling facilities generally. A letter rate would be justifiable on main tram routes. A comparison between the cable and electric systems was certainly in favor of the latter. All extensions should certainly be under electric traction, and steps taken at an early date to electrify the whole system.

Diningroom Suite Built to Last, £12 10/-
Have you illustrated a particularly good Dining Room Suite at a very moderate price. It is a good suite because it will last—a wood won't warp, the mountings won't come away easily, the legs are strong, and the upholstery is of a superior character. We are sure you could easily get £14 for this Suite, but dealing on cash principles only and being satisfied with a small profit we offer it to you for £12 10/-.
This Suite consists of six pieces: Dining Table,
and six chairs—two arm and four straight chairs.
Apart from being an artistically designed suite it is well made and thoroughly dependable
—one which with ordinary care will last a generation.
The fact that it is built under our supervision should assure you that it is sterling in value.

HIS SACRIFICE.

STORY OF A MAN WHO ANSWERED FOR ANOTHER'S CRIME.

By Grant Melnyk.

I was standing on trial for my life. As I listened to the prosecuting counsel's speech, what faint glimmer of hope had existed in my breast died; I felt that I was doomed.

As the witnesses appeared in the box, one after the other, they confirmed all the Crown counsel had said. The barrister acting for me did his best, but it is impossible for bricks to be made without straw.

In the well of the court sat Grace Carlyle, the woman of all others I loved best. So great was my affection for her that I would cheerfully have laid down my life for her.

She sat in the corner of the seat, supported by it. Occasionally her lips were bitten, to check their trembling.

ter to the Home Secretary, but he had no scrap of evidence to substantiate his belief in my innocence.

A formal reply came, to the effect that the authorities "saw no reason to advise His Majesty to interfere with the decision of the court."

As the hours moved into days, my heart sank lower and lower. Not at the fear of death, but because I could not help thinking what a shadow had been cast upon my life.

From the prison cells of my brain I was able to call up some recollections of the dead woman.

Of course that was very absurd; I had discussed the subject of a new story I had just finished.

At the moment the newspapers were full of the raging between "The Times" Book Club and the publishers.

So I professed to fall in with her ideas and to be very grateful, but I was standing, for the crime was she had stood for the crime was she had stood.

The night of the 27th arrived, but my sleep was not for long. I was awakened by the sound of hammering.

"The night passed. In the morning I drank eagerly of the coffee brought in. Then suddenly footsteps sounded outside my cell door, and the governor and the chaplain entered.

"We are here, the latter said, a trifle huskily, 'with news-good news. You are reprieved. Your innocence will be made manifest to the world. She has confessed."

"Confessed?" "Yes," the chaplain answered. "The maid was the murderer."

"She is dead; the maid. But before dying, her deposition was taken by a magistrate. It was that which placed before the jury."

"What a devilish device!" "Staying in the drawing-room window, which was open—she looked in. Alice Carlyle was in the room."

"The woman dropped to the ground. When the maid stopped over her, she saw the room door open. She was quick-witted; sprang to the electric light; switched the room into darkness, and rushed out of the grounds."

"I know," said Samuels, the courtier, "of rolling up the shawl and dressing-gown as she ran, she reached her bicycle; rode furiously back to Webley. As she was dismounting at her mother's door, in her haste her foot slipped, and she went down, breaking her leg."

THE VIOLIN.

By Will X. Redman.

The violin was finished. Its beautiful body, grained and knobbed, smoothed and varnished, shone like polished tortoise-shell in the mellow light which streamed through the fine leaves, and, standing, through the diamond panes of the half open case, on to the bench where it lay.

"We are here, the latter said, a trifle huskily, 'with news-good news. You are reprieved. Your innocence will be made manifest to the world. She has confessed."

TOOTLEBOOM TAKES A HAND IN POLITICS.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

He didn't get any further. About three hundred and fifty men, some with a will weary and swarmed over the platform. Arch was swallowed up like a fly in a mill stream.

Wayzgoose buttoned him in the high street last week. "We got to get Slapdash in Slapdash is the man for Slapdash."

"You can have mine," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

"You don't need to put a suggestion like that before Tootleboom twice. He scolded with his head on the ground. He took his coat off and put the chain on the door, Slapdash was as good as in for Slapdash."

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

CHINESE "PICTOGRAMS."

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

The Reverend Professor Owen, during the opening of the winter session of the R. C. College, pointed out that in 2000 B. C. the Chinese were using pictograms.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

HOW MEN ARE GOING TO BECOME THINGS OF REAL BEAUTY.

In Reply to Henry.

Henry writes a long better ending something like this: "It was just before we got home from the honeymoon. I remember that I got my first little jar—not enough to shake confidence, but it was the one wise man who had solved the problem of how to be happy though married, but just enough to make me wonder, 'How could he possibly have his little bits in matrimony that I had never looked at?'"

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

"You don't need to put a suggestion like that before Tootleboom twice. He scolded with his head on the ground. He took his coat off and put the chain on the door, Slapdash was as good as in for Slapdash."

CARE OF HORSES' MANES AND TAILS.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

In order to improve rough, uneven and unsightly manes and tails, the first thing to be looked after, if dirt is suffered to accumulate at the roots of the long hair, the horse will rub and scratch.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

Another Awful Mystery.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

The mystery was running down the village street at top speed, when he saw a horse of the parish.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

A Friendly Lead.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

The late Sir John Mills was a very good fisherman. He used to tell a story of an old man who was his at a young age.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

A New English Song.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

Oh, father, dear father, come home with me now.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

Waiting for the Worm.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

A tall, stern woman waits for me. When I come home too late.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

An Archbishop's Witticisms.

(thing more nonsensical, more ridiculous, foolish, or—)

Archbishop Whately had a very good sense of humor.

"I don't know," said Arch, "if my wife doesn't object."

BELLEWS' CHANCE

A STORY OF LOVE AND THE SEA.

By G. Addison.

The agent leaned back in his chair, the better to examine the earnest face before him.

"You've as good as reputation as a man could ever wish to be had, Bellew."

"I'm not a safe man," Bellew said, "but you're not a safe man either."

"I've heard that you've got an A.B.S. boat with you for a thrill for run. I don't let you skipper the Sarona, not even for the sake of old times."

"Bellew's lips quivered. His eyes flashed. The shipowner, who had been heavily against the charge, looked at Bellew with a certain respect."

"I've heard that you've got an A.B.S. boat with you for a thrill for run. I don't let you skipper the Sarona, not even for the sake of old times."

Higgins' Transformation.

HOW A BURLY MAN BECAME A BUNNY MURRAY.

By Andrew Murray.

"Christmas," said Mr. Higgins, "is all very well for children and—and women! I can't see nothing in it myself."

"There's a lot of things you can't see nothing in!" his wife remarked placidly. "A visit to the eye-hospital would do you any harm!"

"You keep your mouth shut or I'll keep you in hospital," he said. "I don't care!"

"I don't care!" she said. "I don't care!" he said. "I don't care!" she said.
