Bedroom Suite, £13 10/-

READ THIS STORY!
 A young married couple wanted a nice bedroom suite. They went into nearly every Furniture Warehouse in Town, but they could not find any 'Gilt' that they liked. So they called at Clausen's. The confidentialness of one of their friends improved them. He did not try to force them to buy. There was no need, anyhow. He showed them the suite we illustrate to-day. You should have seen the lady's eyes glaze with delight—you should have seen the broad smile come over the man's face. The bargain was sealed. They said, at many others say, "We'll always come to Clausen's after this." We want our furniture to be your furniture!

That this is a handsome suite at a low price you'll admit. It is made of imitation Walnut or Light-wood with Ash facing, consisting of—4ft. Ward-robe, with two oval glass doors and large drawers; 3ft. 6in. Toilet Table, with three drawers, jasper drawers, and three large drawers; 2ft. 6in. wash-stand, with marble top, and double tile and glass back, with cupboard and two drawers.

ELECTRIC LIGHT FOR NORTHCHOTE. MORE OFFERS. Bull and Ackman, electrical engineers, wrote to the Northchote Council on Monday night intimating that they intended lighting a scheme before the council to light the town with electric current produced from a outside source with an alternative scheme of producing their own power and light with their own boundaries. They would not seek reimbursement for the whether the scheme was approved or rejected. The letter added that Ackman was an expert in electric lighting matters and his schemes had been adopted recently against many others by Preston. Mr. Ackman was now going fully into the matter and would have figures before them in a week or so.

At a later stage of the meeting, Mr. Johnson asked that electric lighting committee had done in regard to the two letters which had been referred to them. Mr. Hayes said it was stated in a letter in the 20th that Mr. Johnson had never seen a contract for electric lighting. Well, if he had he would not have been listening because he had made more than one report since Mr. Johnson had been a member of the council. They had been waiting on the development of a joint scheme, but if nothing came of it they had a scheme of their own. It was at his suggestion that Mr. Wood had written to the council.

Mr. Johnson said the matter was very important to the residents of the town, and he hoped that they had had a scheme of their own. It was at his suggestion that Mr. Wood had written to the council. SMOKE CONCERT TO MR. G. H. HAMILTON. A BIG SEND-OFF. SOME PARTHIAN SHOTS. The smoke concert organised as a "send off" to Mr. G. H. Hamilton, collector, valuer, and assistant secretary of Prestonshire for very many years, who leaves to-day to take up his appointment as rate collector at Hamilton, took place at the shire hall on Thursday. It was one of the largest and most representative gatherings ever seen at a local function of the kind, every seat at the many tables which filled the hall being occupied. The chairman of the entertainment committee, the president of the shire (Mr. Hamilton) presided.

There were several apologies for non-attendance, including one from Mr. W. G. Swift, town clerk of Northchote, who is away on holiday. Mr. Swift said he regretted in the most sincere manner that he was unable to be present. Mr. Hamilton's departure was a great loss to the town, and he would be missed in his new position. The guest of honor was received by the company with musical honours, and he must have felt not a little gratified by such a fine demonstration of affection.

The toast of "The King" was submitted by the chairman and drunk with loyal aplomb. The most interesting part of the evening was the presentation of a large and valuable gift to Mr. Hamilton. The gift was presented by the town council, and it was a most fitting tribute to his long and successful career. Mr. Hamilton's departure was a great loss to the town, and he would be missed in his new position. Vindication of Hardinge's Character.

THE STORY OF A GIRL'S TRUST.

Mrs. Hardinge was standing in the conservatory, a cigarette between her lips. There was a frown on her face...

With a shrug of his shoulders he looked away. His half-smoked cigarette was held between his fingers...

Mrs. Hardinge complied a somewhat reluctant position. The duties of secretary to the Countess were not in themselves very onerous...

A light step made him turn sharply toward the door. A girl's face peeped into the room. "Mr. Hardinge, I am surprised at you. Do you know this is my father, and I have to come and see you."

Hardinge started. "A thousand apologies, Miss Grosvenor. I wouldn't have done it for worlds."

"Business worries?" Mrs. Grosvenor knew the difficulties which beset the path of her father's secretary.

"Partly," he replied. He looked at her quickly, and there was a new look in his eyes which she did not see.

"If you wish to, she replied. "It is not, and I am tired looking everywhere for you. A provoking snub on her face one which found a reflection on her companion's."

"I wanted to see you," she went on. "I have heard from father that you are leaving us."

Hardinge nodded. "Yes, I am leaving sooner than I expected. I thought of packing up my traps to-morrow."

"You are going to the States?" she asked. "I'm a bit of a rolling stone, you know."

"Is that the real reason?" she said. "For a moment a wild desire surged through him to take her in his arms and tell her the truth. Then he remembered his father's name."

"Yes," he said. "I'm a bit of a rolling stone, you know."

"That's the only reason, I'm afraid I'm changeable. Besides, I don't see a young fellow good to see life."

There was a pause before she replied. "I suppose so. Will you stop in England?"

"I haven't decided yet. I don't think I should."

"At that moment relief came to him in the cessation of the music. He rose. "Our dance is over."

The girl glanced at him as she took his arm, but his face was impassive. No sign of the thoughts that were passing through his mind crossed it.

He stood in the ball-room for a few minutes chatting to her, but a reserve had come over them both. Then her next partner coming to claim her, he strode back to the conservatory.

There he flung himself down in the seat which he had so lately occupied. The floor was dark. There was a look of pain on his face. "No," he said once, "I must not see her again."

It was early morning before the last of the guests retired, and the house was in darkness. Hardinge was busy in his room packing up his belongings preparatory to an early departure.

Suddenly he remembered some papers which he had left in Sir Charles's study.

Lighting a candle, he crept slowly and carefully down the stairs and along the corridor.

Suddenly he stopped. The door of the study was open a few inches, and through the chink there shone a ray of light.

He crept up to the door and peeped in. A man was kneeling before a large safe which stood in the corner. By his side rested a black bag, containing a selection of tools and other tools. The man's back was turned to him.

For a few moments Hardinge stood watching the man busy manipulating the safe with a large drill.

Then the man gave a grunt of satisfaction, he put down the drill, and stepped sharply at the door and pulled it inside.

Inside the safe, Hardinge knew, were certain papers, in times of peace practically worthless, but at such a period, when any moment threatened to engulf Europe in war, of paramount importance to a certain country.

stood still and waited. Each of them was waiting. The Countess was waiting. The Countess was waiting. The Countess was waiting.

In a couple of moments there was the sound of footsteps on the floor above, the busy shuffling of doors, and Sir Charles' voice asking what was the matter.

A dozen men came running down stairs and into the room; they stood in a cluster around Hardinge and the Countess. Behind them Hardinge could see Miss Grosvenor. Her face was pale, and she was looking at him.

"My dear count, what is the matter?" said Sir Charles.

"The Count made a quick gesture. 'I could not sleep tonight. It is hot, as I opened the door of my room. Half an hour ago I thought I heard footsteps below. I came downstairs to inspect. I know everyone had gone to bed, and I found this gentleman before the open door of my safe, abstracting these papers.' The Count pointed to a packet lying on the floor. 'Too well he knew the worth of these papers. My country had lost by his not obtaining them.'

Sir Charles rushed forward and picked up the package. He glanced hurriedly through them. Then he turned to Hardinge. "And you, above all men," he said, in a hard voice, "understand now why you were here."

"I understand now why you were here," he said. "I understand now why you were here."

"Then, perhaps, my dear Sir Charles, you will explain the presence of that bag, with your initials upon it, and those implements inside."

"I lent it to you two days ago, count; you know that as well as I do. I understand now why you wished to borrow it."

"The Count made a gesture of amused disgust. "Absurd! Why should I borrow your bag when I have plenty of my own?"

"To cast suspicion on me, so as to save your miserable self," Hardinge turned to Sir Charles. "Which do you believe?"

"Sir Charles looked at the two men, then at the bag on the ground. "I'm afraid the evidence is very much against you," he said. He left his trust had not betrayed. In his own mind he had no doubt as to the guilty man."

"There was an unnecessary harshness in his voice. Hardinge's face went white. "Then I am in your hands," he said. "You will send for the police?"

"As no damage has been done, I shall forget tonight, but I must ask you to leave this house as soon as possible."

For a second Hardinge stood crushed beneath the words, then he drew himself up proudly. "Sir Charles," he said, pointing to the Count, "there stands the guilty man, not I. Some day, perhaps, I shall be able to prove my innocence."

He turned. In silence those around the door made a passage for him to pass through. He walked by them with head erect. At the foot of the stairs stood a girl, Irene Grosvenor. Impulsively she came towards him, and there was a strange light in her eyes.

"Mr. Hardinge," she said, "you are leaving us tonight; I should like to tell you that I believe every word you say in here. I know you are innocent."

"Thank you," he said, gently. Then he looked into her eyes which made his heart beat wildly. "There are two things I should like to tell you before I leave. First, I am innocent. It was that cad, the Count Tournez, who was stealing the papers. I discovered him."

"And the other?" said the girl, softly.

"He stood, his foot upon the first stair, looking down upon her. The light from the hall gas lamp shone upon her face, and showed a whiteness on it."

"I tell you, and shall love you until the end. I should not have told you, but that was why I was leaving. I realized the hopelessness of it. I have nothing to offer you; perhaps, some day, I may have, then I shall come back."

"The girl was silent as he turned and mounted the stairs, but the words came up to him, in a low, happy whisper. "I shall wait for you until my hair is grey, if need be."

They rang in his ears when, a couple of hours later, he walked up the long drive, out of the old life into the new one which lay before him.

Arrived in London he went straight to the dignities of an old cottage friend of his. He arrived at breakfast. He listened to his tale in silence. "The Count Tournez," he said, musingly, "I shouldn't like to say definitely, but it's my opinion the title did open some twenty years ago, and was well with that of a German secret service agent, a Frenchman, named Vivienne. What are you going to do?"

Hardinge shrugged his shoulders. "To make a living, how, I have not decided yet, but my spare time I shall spend in exposing the Count Tournez."

"Three years had passed—three years in which many things had happened. The state of European politics had undergone a great change. The entente between France and England had blossomed into an alliance, one which should have ensured the peace of Europe, but war clouds were gathering. Diplomatic relations between England and Germany were strained regarding a certain coal station in the Far East. That scene of European politics—the Chinese Seas—promised again to throw two countries into war."

It was a sign of the times that the cultures of diplomacy, the secret service agents, were gathered at Berlin, and Paris, while a few were even stationed at St. Petersburg.

Sir Charles Grosvenor was spending the summer in Paris, whether a mission of the most delicate nature had taken him.

Hardinge had disappeared, but upon each anniversary of the memorable evening he sent a card to the girl who had trusted him when everyone else had only suspicions and doubt.

It was in the middle of June. The usual cosmopolitan crowd thronged the Cafe Anglais. A feeling of enthusiasm which fills all men and women at the first intimation of thought of war.

tail figure threading his way across the room to his side. "Ah! Holroyd," he said, "you're late. How are you? You got my telegram?"

"Yes, thanks, and I've brought you some news. The Count Tournez, otherwise Vivienne, is in Paris now, and under another name. I do not expect you will recognize him; he has shaved off his moustache. Age has done his worst. The last few years have been trying ones for the German secret service. You see that man at the third table on the left, talking to a couple of women? That is Vivienne."

Hardinge followed the direction in which his friend was looking. "That had brought many changes in the world. Holroyd's hair was tinged with grey—but in a second Hardinge recognized him."

"Yes," he said, "that is the man." "I am having him watched night and day; and he is in turn watching Sir Charles."

"Why?"

"Because, my friend, despatches are passing daily between Sir Charles and the Foreign Office, and one day a certain despatch will come by special messenger which Vivienne will have to obtain."

"Then will he be able to get it?"

"Hardinge's financial position had changed since the day he left Sir Charles' house. A fairly large legacy, added to a sum he had made out in South Africa had given him a substantial income."

During his stay in Paris he rented a furnished flat in the Rue Versailles.

"At that flat a couple of evenings later came Holroyd. He ran hurriedly into the room where Hardinge was sitting."

"You had better come round to Sir Charles' house," he said. "The messenger has come on to the Embassy."

Outside a motor was drawn up, and the two men sprang into it.

"That letter will mean peace or European war, and Vivienne is bent upon gaining possession of it."

"At the corner of the Rue Brancasse the car stopped, and the two men alighted."

As they did so a figure stepped out of the shadows to meet them. It was a junior member of the secret service. "Vivienne has not come yet," he said to Holroyd.

Holroyd nodded. "Good! You need not stop now."

He drew Hardinge into the shadow. "I do not expect we shall have long to wait. Vivienne has made every preparation—a car is to be in the Rue Clancy at eleven o'clock, and it is half-past nine now."

"How on earth do you find all those things out?" asked Hardinge.

Holroyd smiled. "It is part of my duty as a secret service agent—what I am paid for."

"They were almost facing Sir Charles' house. Lights were burning in all the rooms, and once they saw a shadow pass across a window on the first floor. "That is Sir Charles' study, and that I expect, Sir Charles himself. And here is Vivienne."

Holroyd pointed to a figure which had just entered the Rue Brancasse. The figure walked quickly up the street, named before Sir Charles' house, and then entered."

Holroyd emerged from the shadows. "Now," he said, "they crossed the road, and walked up the garden to the door. Then Holroyd whistled softly three times. A pre-arranged signal," he explained, "one of our men is here disguised as a servant to protect Sir Charles."

The front door opened softly, and they entered.

From a room on the left—Sir Charles' study—came the sound of voices.

"More softly still Holroyd opened the door of the study."

"That letter, Sir Charles," said a voice, which Hardinge recognized as belonging to the man he had known as the Count Tournez."

The three men peeped through the open chink. Sir Charles was seated at his desk, before him the German letter. A few feet from the desk stood Vivienne, a revolver in his hand.

"And if I do not give it to you?" he said.

"I shall fire. Quick! there is no time to lose; I must have it. Give it to me!"

Vivienne took a step forward, the revolver in one hand, the other outstretched for the letter.

ings," he said, "I owe you an apology—a deep apology. If there is anything I can do—"

"Yes," said Hardinge. "That night you turned me out of your home, penniless, I vowed to make a name—and an income, because of the words of sympathy and love one woman spoke to me. That woman was your daughter. I have succeeded, so I have come tonight, my character is cleared, to ask you for her hand."

Before Sir Charles could reply, a figure ran into the room—the figure of his daughter.

"Maudie," she said, "you have come back and I have heard every thing."

She took Hardinge's hand in both hers, looking up into his face, and there was that in her eyes which made every man save one turn abruptly away."

Hardinge bent down and kissed her. "Yes, dear," he said in a whisper, "I have come back."

MONARCH IN EXILE.

Handsome Duke of Orleans, Last of the Bourbons.

Philippe, the Duke of Orleans, for example, a handsome, dark man, with a high forehead, deep-set eyes, and a pointed beard of the prevailing Parisian mode. He does not live in Paris however. The last of the Bourbons family in direct line from Henry of Navarre, he was taught by his father, the late comte de Paris, that eventually he would reign as king of France.

"At that flat a couple of evenings later came Holroyd. He ran hurriedly into the room where Hardinge was sitting."

"You had better come round to Sir Charles' house," he said. "The messenger has come on to the Embassy."

One Touch of Nature.

A TALE OF THE CIRCUS RING.

"It's going to be a gala performance tonight, and no blessed effort, Bob! Lord Claude Ferraby, of Stonehill, together with his household, are driving down from the castle to have a peep at the evening show. Twenty miles of road to come here, my boy, and yet they do it. You bet they've heard Molyneux's Circus is the smartest sort of show to take trouble to see."

"No, by love, he hasn't!" The proprietor of the circus in question rubbed his plump hands in smug satisfaction. Wise in his generation and in the ways of the road, Molyneux was quick to realize that the castle party's advent was certain to attract a heavy patronage.

NORTHCOTE TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, May 8.

Present:—Crs. Archbold (mayor), Williams, Hastings, Johnson, Hayes, Harry, Robb, Dennis, Smith, McInosh, and Lees.

An apology was made for the absence of Cr. Plant, who was away in the country.

Water Main in Gatch Street.

The Metropolitan Board of Works wrote stating that in consequence of the construction of Gatch street the 4-inch water main had been exposed and it would have to be lowered at the council's expense.

Cr. Dennis said he had not noticed that the main was exposed. He moved that the matter be referred to the works committee, the engineer to report.—Carried.

Blasting in Northcote S.

The Metropolitan Board of Works wrote stating they had notified Mr. Starr, the contractor for the North-South sewerage contract, to keep the blasting charges as low as possible. The engineer for sewerage, however, said that when he was on the contract the previous week there was nothing unusual about the charges.—Received.

Green Street Drain.

The Public Health Department wrote asking what action had been taken on complaint re Green street drain.

Cr. Smith moved that a reply be sent that the matter was under consideration with the loan schedule.—Carried.

Empire Day Celebration

The Minister of Education wrote inviting the cooperation of the council in celebrating Empire Day 1911.

Cr. Dennis moved that £5 be voted, the money to be left to the discretion of the mayor.—Carried.

Cr. Hayes seconded.—Carried.

Cr. Hayes said he proposed expending the £5 voted during his term of office on a picture of the late King, to be hung in the State School hall.

Completion of Joint Drainage Scheme.

The Shire of Heidelberg wrote stating that at a public meeting held recently at Fairfield a resolution was unanimously carried that the council be requested to complete the joint drainage scheme as originally proposed, as it is discovered by the residents north of the railway line that unless the drain is carried to Mitchell street little benefit will be derived by them from the present work; and at the last meeting of the council it was resolved that the remainder of the work be undertaken, providing the borrowing proposals now in hand are approved by the ratepayers.—To be considered with clause 4 of the finance committee.

Payment for Drainage Works.

The Heidelberg Shire Council wrote agreeing to the terms on which Northcote should pay its proportion of the cost of the joint drainage works.—To be considered with clause 4 of the finance committee.

Withdrawal of Application.

Nurse Hunter wrote asking permission to withdraw her application for registration of her premises at 19 Bower street as a private hospital.—The request was granted.

Cr. Bainbridge said he had a petition in regard to the matter, but under the circumstances it would be needless to present it.

Library Furnishings.

Church Bros. wrote asking for the opportunity of quoting for furniture and floor coverings for the new library.—Referred to the library committee.

Edwards Crescent Paths.

N. J. Ferguson, Edwards Crescent, wrote bringing under notice the condition of the footpath at the above address, same being in urgent need of attention, it being almost impossible to walk with safety after a little rain. He would also call attention to the practice of running the waste water from spouts on to the footpath where no channel has been made.—Referred to the works committee.

Drainage Mitchell Street East.

H. J. Duan, Mitchell street, wrote stating that he had noticed in last week's Leader that it was stated that no complaints have been made re the east end of Mitchell street and the flood waters. He begged to state that complaints had been made for years by himself and others. The last flood waters continued for about a week and it was impossible to cross without getting wet through. They had been paying rates for 20 years and it seems strange that nothing had been done in all that time to lessen the evil. He trusted something would soon be accomplished.—Received.

Edwards Crescent Right-of-Way.

Percy Hemmle wrote stating he would be pleased to receive an answer from the council re right-of-way from Edwards Crescent.

Burnt on a Red-Hot Stove.

TERRIBLE WOUND HEALED BY ZAM-BUK.

Mrs. A. Jackson, of 114 of Kippax St., Garry Hill, Sydney, says:—"My little grandson sustained a terrible burn through accidentally placing his hand on a red-hot stove. The pain of his hand was practically unbearable, and the wound became a mass of inflammation. Small blisters formed, which spread on to another until they became one great blister, with a border of painful, inflamed ridges around it. The wound presented a fearful sight and caused the little fellow much suffering. Being in the habit of keeping a pot of that wonderful healer, Zam-Buk, always handy in the house in case of emergency, we applied a dressing of the balm to the child's hand. The effect was marvellous, for Zam-Buk immediately soothed the wound, relieved the pain, and drew out the inflammation, and within a fortnight Zam-Buk grew new healthy skin in the place of the raw, inflamed wound, leaving his hand as sound and strong as before. On many other occasions has Zam-Buk proved of great value, it being almost a daily need, and I have always found it a reliable hand-and-foot cure."

Zam-Buk is unequalled for its many uses, such as:—

burns, scalds, sunburn, cuts, bruises, blisters, sores, etc. Of all ointments and salves it is the best and most reliable.

Send for free trial bottle to the Zam-Buk Co., 30 Pitt St., Sydney.

Edwards Crescent to Knowles street.

So far as the owners on the right-of-way were willing and want the right-of-way made. There were only 7 or 8 owners to be approached.

Cr. Dennis moved that Mr. Dennis be informed that the surveyor had been instructed to give temporary relief, pending construction of the right-of-way with the next batch of private streets.

Cr. Hayes said he understood the property owners were willing to pay for the work right away. If so it was no use waiting till the other streets were made ready.

Liability of Councils.

The Shire of Benalla wrote appealing for assistance to go to the High Court with the case of Cheryl v. the Shire of Benalla, the decision of the Full Court being against them. The case was in which a horse was driven down a lane not used for vehicular traffic and fell into a shallow drain and was injured and the owner sued for damages.—Referred to the committee of the whole. Cr. Hayes remarked that he thought this was a matter for the Municipal Association to take up.

McDonald Street.

Several property owners in McDonald street wrote requesting that some ashes be placed on the footpaths.—Referred to the works committee on the motion of Crs. Dennis and Bainbridge.

Use of Small Hall.

The Church of Christ made application for the use of small hall, Westbourne grove, for services on Sunday forenoon.—Referred to hall committee on the motion of Crs. Williams and Bainbridge.

Treasurer for St. David Street.

A property owner in St. David street wrote asking permission to plant a couple of trees.—granted, subject to approval of the surveyor.

Public Works Committee.

Cr. Bainbridge (chairman) submitted the report, recommending:—

1. That accounts amounting to £261 5s 10d be passed for payment.—Adopted.

2. List of Works, North Ward.—That the following list of works be approved and the Town Surveyor instructed to proceed with the works. The sum of £50 for paving is to cover the surplus proportion of the cost, the balance is to be charged to and collected from the property owners liable therefor:—

Paving—Mansfield St., south side, from drain to St. David Street; Alexandra Street, east side; ... £50 0 0

Lamps—4 Pender's Gr. Estate, 1 Raleigh St., 1 Darchin Road, Corner of Rossmoyne and Hamilton Streets 28 0 0

—Adopted.

3. Mr. J. M. D. Graham and others, re Russell Street.—That they be informed that the street being private the Council can only deal with same under the Local Government Act 1903, but if they desire to lay down the channel themselves no objection will be taken thereto.

Cr. Harry raised the point that this might contravene the council's policy. After discussion the motion was agreed to on the understanding that no official sanction be given to the work.

Finance and Park Committee.

The report was submitted by the chairman (Cr. Williams) showing that the receipts for the month had amounted to £2297 6s 7d and the balance £4111 3s 7d; also recommending:—

1. That accounts amounting to £468 15s 8d be passed for payment.—Adopted.

2. Gas Conference Report.—That this Council's proportion of the expenses (£9 13s 6d) be paid and the attention of the Metropolitan Gas Co. be drawn to the insufficiency in the supply of gas within the town, the pressure generally being very low.—Adopted.

3. Hope of Northcote Junior Trust (12-1-11) re permission to play football in Merri Park.—That the secretary be informed that the use of the Park has already been granted to two other clubs.—Adopted.

4. Shire of Heidelberg re contribution towards the cost of drainage works.—To report that the Heidelberg Council has been requested to arrange for this Council's proportion, on the basis set out in letter of 15-2-11, through its bank at the current rate of interest, pending the raising of the amount by loan.—Adopted.

5. Supplementary Valuation.—That Mr. F. W. Harding be paid the sum of £10 for making the supplementary valuation of property authorized by the Council.—Adopted.

6. Meat Inspector's Report.—11 pigs and 71 calves and cattle examined and branded from the 14th to the 28th April.—Adopted.

Committee of the Whole.

1. By-Law Batching.—That the matter of the repeal of By-Laws 1 and 2 and the making of a new By-Law for the control of batthers be made an order of the day for the next meeting of the Council.—Adopted.

2. Board of Public Health re Garbage Destructor and abolition of municipal tips.—That the consideration of the matter be deferred for one year.—Adopted.

3. Building Regulations.—That the draft Regulation prepared be printed and issued to Councillors, and be made an order of the day for consideration on the 5th June next.—Adopted.

Ordinary Business.

Cr. Williams drew attention to the fact that the lamps in the transeps after remained until till after it was dark, and sometimes the headlights were unlit.—Lesser's attention to be called.

Cr. Hobb moved that a tarred metal crossing be put across Spencer street to the new entrance to the Croxton station at Gault street.

Cr. Bainbridge seconded.—Carried.

Cr. Johnson moved that the matter of replacing the pitches opposite small hall in Westbourne grove with asphalt be considered by the works committee.—Carried.

Cr. Hobb moved that the Railway Department be asked to move fence back on west side of railway, below Croxton, to make pathway for school children and others.

 Kruse's Fluid Magnesia FOR INDIGESTION, BILIOUSNESS, AND ACIDITY.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1911.
 Printed and published by the proprietors, R. J. and J. B. WHALLEY, at their office, 27 High Street, Northcote, in the State of Victoria. Price 1d

YOURS FOR £12 10s.
 WHEN we advise you that this Suite is built for long life, that it is made from carefully selected and thoroughly seasoned wood, by well-paid cabinet makers who make furniture just as well, just as hardy, and highly finished as though it were for their own homes—you will agree that this Victorian Suite is superior in value to the price. If you need a comfortable, artistic and serviceable suite at a low price—buy this one. The suite consists of 24 chairs, Dining Table, and 2 side chairs—of small and low size, and 2 chairs. Apart from being an artistically designed suite, it is well made and thoroughly durable—some suites with ordinary care will last for more than a generation. The fact that it is built under our supervision should suggest to you that it is a sterling value.

CHAPTER IX.

The Dead Restored.

Nurse Ives took the little body out of the trunk and laid it down on a pile of warm blankets in front of the fire; then, taking a small bottle from the table, she proceeded to put it in order and applied it to the child's neck and arms. On this occasion, however, the electric current was far more powerful.

The nurse watched the child with keen anxiety as she used this means for her restoration. At first the strong electric current seemed to have little or no effect; it was gradually, however, that the color which had been so long absent from the child's cheeks when the amyl nitrite had been applied deepened and the child quivered restlessly.

At last the eyes were opened just for an instant and then closed again. When this happened the nurse ceased to apply the current and turned to the table, prepared a hypodermic injection of ether. This was quickly injected into the child's arm. The effect was instantaneous—a gentle glow pervaded the whole of the hitherto livid frame and the little body quivered out of lead to feet.

Once again the boy's eyes were opened and now it was possible to see that he was breathing, although very faintly. Nurse Ives began very gently to rub the limbs with her warm hands, glowing like the child's face with her own breath into the child's mouth. His breath was now coming evenly and steadily.

She once again applied the current, and the boy began to stir. Then she lifted the arms above the head and put them down again, performing by this means artificial respiration. The child now looked so much better that there was a dreamy, unconscious film over the bright, dark eyes, but he was awake, alive, no longer a corpse. He was a living boy once again.

Nurse Ives took the little wrist between her finger and thumb and the pulse was working, but somewhat feebly. She did not dare to lift the boy yet into a sitting position. She allowed the full influence of the fire to play on his face and neck, and when she still applied a gentle current of electricity.

After a time she put away the instrument and, leaning by the child, put into his mouth a few drops of very strong soup mixed with brandy. He swallowed it freely. She felt the pulse again. It was steady, stronger, less intermittent.

"Where are you?" asked the boy. "With me, dear little man, quite safe. Don't talk now, you are weak. I am going to give you something new to eat."

"I am awfully hungry," said the child. The nurse knelt low by his side. She fed him by spoon. She had made her mind that the child should live. Her exertions were rewarded. She thought of nothing else at the moment, her mind was filled with pure gladness. She even forgot to eat.

"They all think that he is recovered," said the doctor. "But you know, dear little man, that you are not yet well. You are weak, but you are getting on your feet."

"I am awfully hungry," said the child. The nurse knelt low by his side. She fed him by spoon. She had made her mind that the child should live. Her exertions were rewarded. She thought of nothing else at the moment, her mind was filled with pure gladness. She even forgot to eat.

It would, she felt certain, be madness to confide her secret to another, and yet she knew that if she married Tabor, as she meant to do almost immediately, she would be bound to help her in the care of the boy.

Early in the evening Nurse Ives took the child in her arms and rocked him to sleep. The boy was wide awake when she began and resisted her efforts.

"Don't stare at me," he said, becoming suddenly awake. "I don't know what you are doing. I don't know what you are doing. I don't know what you are doing."

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES.

By E. R. PERCOTT, Principal, School of Horticulture, Herts.

THE ORCHARD.

Cultivation work should be well on the way by this time. The planting should be completed, so as to leave plenty of time for other orchard work. The autumn ploughing may be done, and the soil should be ploughed in the best way possible.

MANAGING. It is just possible, where a large estate has been acquired, that a few acres of orchard may be added to the main body of the orchard.

Perhaps the most useful and valuable of manures is stable manure. It is of great use, not only as a manure, but as an improver of soil.

It has been pointed out previously that an improved system of manuring the fruit trees, from the continued use of manure, is a very important part of the orchard work.

General Work. Drainage systems should be extended with as little loss of time as possible.

VEGETABLE GARDEN. The vegetable garden should be kept down to the lowest possible level.

Flower Garden. The flower garden should be kept down to the lowest possible level.

Wonders of Modern Science. The wonders of modern science are many and varied.

WINTERING BEES.

By F. R. BAINBRIDGE, Bee Expert, in the Victorian Journal of Agriculture.

WHAT EDISON THINKS OF BIRDMEN.

If We Could Only Fly by Radium.

Thomas A. Edison was asked recently: "What is your opinion of the progress made by the birdmen?"

"I have often wondered," he replied, "why it is not possible for the birdman to carry a parachute."

"No, they could not," Edison answered, without hesitation. "Storage batteries to produce sufficient power for a year would be too heavy for the birdman to carry."

WHAT IT FEELS LIKE TO BE MAD.

If you wish to understand mental disorder and wish a person feels, you may study it yourself in the different phases of your mental life.

SECRETS OF A CHIROPODIST.

"I'll tell you a secret," said the chiropodist. "We should have no out of business if our patients will only know that their worst enemies are their own feet."

A STRANGE LEGACY.

According to a French newspaper a Londoner has recently bequeathed a large sum of money to a young girl.

THE OLDEST MOUNTAINS IN THE WORLD.

Stretching across Canada, north of St. Lawrence, and ending in the St. Lawrence, is a range of mountains known as the Laurentian Highlands.

FRUIT AND OLD AGE.

Physiologists claim that growth from infancy to old age is a process of gradual ossification, and that the stiffness of age is caused by the deposits of calcareous matter on cartilage.

WHITLOW.

This name is given to a very severe form of inflammation that attacks the tendons and the muscles of the finger and hand.

LAPSES OF AUTHORS.

The lapses in detail on the part of even great artists and authors, doubtless sometimes to ignorance, but more often to the need to express themselves, are many and varied.

Some of the most interesting of these lapses are those of the author of "The Pickwick Papers."

Hanerton's Revenge.

By H. Garstner.

The Cape steamer "Riviera" was bearing Southampton. It was evening. There was just a hint of the cliffs of England would be discernible ere darkness fell.

"There it was! Thank Heaven!" Dick Hanerton stood at the prow, eager to catch a first glimpse. He had the keen eyes, the hungry heart of the returning exile.

"I gave you most of the current news in my letters, Edith," he was saying. "But there is one matter—"

"Yes," he resumed. "It is a matter that I mention reluctantly, but the fact is well—"

"What is that old story? I told Mr. Bonar before I went away that I never could be his wife. I have come now deeply convinced in my own mind, though, frankly, I never gave Edith a thought all the time."

Captain Weipott's Diplomacy.

HOW HE SMOOTHED OVER A YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE'S FIRST QUARREL.

Muriel and Fred had been married for two months when Uncle John—Captain John Weipott—paid his surprise visit.

Muriel and Fred had been married for two months when Uncle John—Captain John Weipott—paid his surprise visit. During that time a cross word had never been exchanged, they had lived, without having sampled even one of the little, little misunderstandings that overtake so many young married folk.

SCOUTMASTER TOOTLEBOOM.

And the Raid of the Cuckoo Patrol.

It was really his wife's doing that Archibald Tootleboom hurried him into the Scout movement. Archibald had long been dreaming and talking of the day when his own boys, but fathered first-born, might become Scoutmasters.

REGULAR EGG PRODUCTION.

When pullets commence to lay, they are one thing; come they lay regularly every day, and others only twice a week.

When pullets commence to lay, they are one thing; come they lay regularly every day, and others only twice a week. After the first few days, the eggs should be laid with a system of regularity; irregularity will mean no eggs, and no eggs mean no profit.

SELECTED RECIPES.

Apple Whip. Six large apples, six tablespoons of sugar, one lemon, three eggs. Peel and slice the apples, and stir them with the sugar and thin strips of lemon rind.

Swiss Pudding. Stale Swiss roll cut in slices, and place round the sides of a buttered mold, then fill up the center with pieces; heat up the eggs with the milk, sugar, and essence of vanilla, and pour over the pudding.

Dear Ginger. Six lbs. of sugar, 1/2 lb. sweet preserved ginger, 1/2 lb. green gelatin, 1/2 lb. sugar to each pound of pears. Cut the ginger into slices; stew the sugar over them. Leave all night. Cook next day till an outdoor color. Serve with white sauce.

Lady Almond. Three 1/2 lb. cans of Jordan almonds. Pound them with 2 ounces of loaf-sugar and 1/2 lb. of butter in a mortar until fine. Add a little rose-water or orange-flower water for flavoring. Put a little very roughly on a greased tin, and bake in a very slow oven till an outdoor color. Serve with the white jam on top.

Tomato Soup. Four large tomatoes, two quarts of stock, one onion, butter, one onion. The whole should be boiled, and the onion should be put in a cloth and squeezed out. Add a little milk and strain the soup through a fine sieve.

Pancakes and Fritters. The principal reason for general use in the dressing of these articles is that your pan must not be new, but thoroughly clean, that you fry them in a hot, but not smoking, oil, and that you drain them on a light brown cloth, and the grease must be properly drained from them before sending to table.

Custard. In making custard, first on a saucer, and then in a mold. It is a good idea to have a little milk should make a rich custard. This also does not require too fast an oven.

Fancy Apples. Required: Seven or eight apples, one cinnamon, one nutmeg, and one cardamom. Peel and core the apples, place them in a scrub, and add a little sugar. Cook through. The syrup should be made of the sugar, juice of two lemons, and sufficient rind of lemon to give a tartness to the cake, and depend upon the size of the cake, and depend upon the size of the cake, and depend upon the size of the cake.

Cakes and Biscuits. One very important point to be attended to in making these articles is that your pan must not be new, but thoroughly clean, that you fry them in a hot, but not smoking, oil, and that you drain them on a light brown cloth, and the grease must be properly drained from them before sending to table.
