CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.
"Does that fool Avery behave damnably as a rule?"
"If you mean he is a constant worshipping at the shrine—yes," said Sanna. "You know he was badly hit at the Beverley."
"That was a different matter. The girl is a wife."
"Celia can take care of herself, believe me." Evidence was given that she was true to her trust if she sanctions this sort of thing.
"My aunt did not bargain for the cunning of a child in leading-strings. Besides, Mrs. Lennox isn't a child. She's a wide awake young person, the daughter of a scheming, worldly mother, whose training converted Celia into a highly-finished modern product. Were I to interfere I should be snubbed."
"She encourages Avery, then?"
"Oh, decidedly, or he would soon quit."
"You think she is still in love with him?"
"Look at them again and judge for yourself."
They were in a cabaret famous for its nightly entertainments, and patronised by haut monde and demi-monde. The Major looked in the direction Sanna's gesture indicated, and his brows drew down.
CHAPTER XVIII
Robert's secretiveness regarding the London visit ruffled Mac, and for a long time he avoided reference to it and Celia, but one damp morning, when the barriers of resolve broke down Robert entered the doctor's quarters and was greeted with an affectionate "Hi!" Teenie had returned to Red Cross, having been ended, and they were alone. Robert flopped into an arm chair and watched Mac tease a pipeful of tobacco with meticulous care. "I haven't seen you and Effie for some time," said, holding the setter between his knees, his eyes on the dog instead of on Mac. "At least, it seemed an age ago you going on well at the hospital?"
"Excellently. We haven't had a fatal case."
"I hope Effie isn't being over-worked."
"Don't talk to me about Effie. She's bullying it to drive me crazy, ruling the roost from morning to dewy eve."
"More friction? I must separate you two."
"Ach, mind your own business and you'll find it handful enough," granted Mac. "She's my cross and I'd as lief be with her as without her; God's truth I would. I count her a wholesome disciple of the flesh. Bereft of her I'd be in a predicament of a chap I heard of who pined and sickened when the surgeons cut out of the back of his neck a wen he'd had for years. Creatures of habit, aren't we?"
"Yes we may even learn to kiss our crosses."
"Don't try to be fresh; it doesn't suit you. By the bye, since we are chin-wagging I'd have you know you served us a rotten trick, scurrying south, and leaving it to Teenie to tell us the news. Mac lit up a pipe, puffing furiously. Robert was shamefaced.
"I claim for you and Effie old man."
"I said that to her, said you had lost your head and hurried the missus away on the spur of the moment. But why to London? There are places nearer better suited to her."
"So? and you weren't eager to share the holiday?"
"I thought I'd be needed at home."
"You knew that you were no earthly good to us."
"Under Mac's questioning, rather sad gaze, Robert quailed.
"We didn't want you, Robin, and I suppose you weren't wanted in London, either. It's hard lines. Been getting letters? You needn't answer 'em. Eh? Only a couple of post-cards. She isn't missing you. Now I'm presuming, your haughty jerk of the hand tells me, but I'm in brave mood and he fettle determined not to be cowed. Bless you, I'm quite aware you and Celia haven't run smoothly in double harness, and to pretend otherwise is useless."
"You see too far," said Robert, a trifle stiffly.
"Claiming a friend's privilege. Faithful are the wounds of a friend. I'll go further and say it's your duty to be in London, because Dick Avery is there."
"Who is Dick Avery?"
"You met him at Scarecliffe, the Adonis of the Beverley."
"Josh Haslett's nephew? What has he to do with me?"
"Perhaps nothing; perhaps an immense deal. Avery and Celia Connor were lovers at Scarecliffe before you appeared on the scene."
"The cold glitter in Robert's eyes did not daunt Mac, or the grim rigidity of his jaws.
"Lovers?" he reiterated. "Joiecy and others told me, and I had previously had my doubts stirred by his habit of scowling at you, and hobnobbing in corners with Miss Percival, who was Miss Connor's close companion after the mother's death. The hotel lived in hourly anticipation of an engagement announcement till you arrived. You freed Mrs. Connor's ambition. Avery was discarded and you were taken on. It was he who raised the disturbance in the church porch on the day you were married, and—"
Robert sprang to his feet, and Mac thrust him back into the arm-chair, gravely resolute.
"Steady the Guards! You've got to hear me, or I'll never have a minute's peace. Meddling in your matrimonial affairs is no crime, and only a feeling of responsibility to you urges me to this step. Avery really was Celia's lover, and no catch, for he was bitter poor. You were a thumping big fish to hook, and whether the mother coerced the girl or the

WEDDINGS
SHERBURN—NEVILL

Great interest was manifested in a pretty wedding which took place at the Preston Methodist Church on Saturday, August 18. The contracting parties were Miss Doris Eleanor Nevill, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Nevill, of "Larnoo," Southernhay St., Preston, and Mr. Charles Louis Sherburn, son of the late Charles and Mrs. R. Sherburn, of Dudley St., North Fitzroy. Friends of the bride had appropriately decorated the church with floral decorations. Louis Sherburn, J. McIlroy, B.A., E.D., officiated; Mrs. R. Sherburn presided at the organ, and Miss Henley sang "They Say" at the conclusion of the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a pretty frock of blue georgette and silver lace, made in bouffant fashion, with tiny georgette frills on the hips, and an uncommonly dainty, delicate, silver lacy basket containing georgette roses, on the skirt. An oval veil of Brussels lace was caught to the head with a coronet of orange blossom. She carried a beautiful shower bouquet of white camellias and roses. The bridesmaids were Misses Amy and Ella Nevill (sisters of the bride), Allie Stall (sister of the groom), and Misses Groom. Pink and blue were the choice of colors, two bridesmaids being dressed in pink georgette, with grey georgette frills, and two in blue georgette, with frills to match, which were kept in place by tiny coral, rosebuds and diamante. Each carried 1830 posies to match. The best man was Mr. Harry Sherburn (brother of the bridegroom), assisted by Messrs. A. Frey, D. Stevens and B. Gray. Showers of confetti greeted the bridal party as they left the church, to the strains of "The Wedding March," played by Mrs. R. Sherburn. An adjournment was then made to Northmanby Hall, Thornbury, where 100 guests sat down at the tables. They were received at the entrance by the mother of the bride, who wore handsome black satin, cornelled in autumn shades, with hat to match, and an 1830 posy. Mrs. Sherburn, sen., also carried a charming posy and wore grey and black satin. The usual toasts were honored, that of "The Bride and Bridegroom" being proposed by Rev. J. McIlroy, who presided. "The Bridesmaids," proposed by the bridegroom, was responded to by Mr. H. Sherburn. "The Parents of the Bride" was proposed by Mr. P. J. Blakemore, and "The Mother of the Bridegroom" by Mr. Silver, the responses being made by Mr. C. G. Gray and Mr. W. Sherburn. The unique occasion of two "grand-dads" of the bride being present necessitated a change in the order of the toasts, and made that one of them and travel from Rutherglen to attend his granddaughter's wedding. The catering and beautiful wedding cake were entrusted to Mrs. Green, who gave every satisfaction. The latter part of the evening was spent in dancing and harmony, the music being supplied by Messrs. Southern Syncopeaters and clarionettes, items being provided by Miss Brentnall and Mr. W. Sherburn. After a honeymoon spent at Ballarat, Bendigo and Melbourne, Mr. and Mrs. Sherburn returned to Cambridge, where they will in future reside.

McDONALD—ARNOLD

A pretty wedding was celebrated at the home of Christ, High St., Northcote, on August 18. The contracting parties being Herbert Hector McDonald, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. McDonald, and Doris Emily, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Arnold, late Mr. Eli Arnold. The church had been decorated in pastel shades, with asparagus fern, white wedding bells, lattice work and arches. The bride wore a beautiful dress of white and cream georgette, lined with navy blue silk, and heavily beaded and worked with lovers' knots and orange blossom. Her veil was of white tulle, worked with baskets and "wedding bells." Her wreath was of orange blossom, she carried a shower bouquet of snowdrops, heath, junquils and water lilies. The bridesmaids were Miss Winnie Arnold, sister of the bride, and Miss Eva Johnson. The train bearer was Miss Felma Armstrong (niece of the bride). The bridesmaids were prettily dressed in pale shades of mauve georgette, with orange silk, white and silver-headed, with rose trailers. They wore silver lisse head bands and pink georgette over crepe de chine with vandigler slips and beaded top. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Dr. Hinrichsen. Mr. Wm. Hope was best man, and Mr. Frank (cousin of the bride) was groomsmen. Mr. W. H. H. Arnold gave the bride away. During the signing of the register Miss W. Armstrong (sister of the bride), sang "A Hazy Morning," and as the bridal pair were leaving the church Miss M. Amery played the Wedding March. The bride's gift to the bridegroom was a travelling case, and the bridegroom's gifts were to the bride, a handsome hand bag, to the bridesmaids, hand bags, and to the train bearer, a gold armband. The reception was held at the Austral Salon, High St., Northcote. The bride's mother wore a costume of navy blue Jersey velvet, piped with fawn, beaded with bronze beads; also a brown choker and smart fawn hat. She carried an 1830 posy of brown and gold. The bridegroom's mother wore black crepe de chine, trimmed with lace, and she carried an 1830 posy of mauve sweet peas and pansies. Dancing and games were indulged in, and a pleasant evening was spent. Mr. C. McDonald, father of the bridegroom, gave an exhibition of step dancing, and Miss Armstrong, a fancy dancing; songs were given by Mrs. Taylor (cousin of the bride), Mrs. Armstrong, and a recitation by Mr. J. Arnold. The bride's travelling dress was of navy blue crepe de chine, relieved with red and gold cornelli work. She also wore a black concey coat with stunk collar. The presents were handsome, and included many cheques.

THE COBBERS' CLUB

Dear Cobbers—How are you all? I am glad to see that there are still a good number of our cobbles coming along.

NEW COBBERS

Under Phil and the Percy we have as new cobbles this week Willie (Sept. 17), Curran Andrew (Sept. 17), Duncan Mathew (Sept. 18).

OUR MAIL BAG

Dear Uncle Phil—Will you enroll me as a member of the Cobbers' Club. I am twelve years old, and am in the grade with best boys in my school.

THE SECRETS OF SUCCESS

Never be late. Never be absent. Never be careless. Always be on time. Always be on your feet.

CONTRIBUTIONS

A MISADVENTURE. Said Zacko to Fluffy one summer's day. "Let us assail you."

THE LONDON ASSURANCE

Transacts Fire, Marine, Motor, Car, Motor Cycle, Plane Glass, Workmen's Compensation, Public Risk, Personal Accidents, and all other insurances.

THE COBBERS' CLUB

My first is in a ball, but not in a goal. My second is in a goal, but not in a net. My third is in a net, but not in a cup.

BIRTHDAYS

Happy birthdays to Frank Johnston (Sept. 17), Curran Andrew (Sept. 17), Duncan Mathew (Sept. 18).
