CHAPTER I.
THE LETTERS.
They were sitting out in a palm-screened alcove at the head of the grand staircase—a little, dark man of about forty, and a slight, pretty girl of eighteen, with wonderful pale gold hair.
Six months before these two had been engaged, and now she was married to someone else; and this was their first meeting since he had broken off the engagement. To her it was a momentous meeting; there was something nervously picking at the cord of her painted black fan, her soft blue eyes round and strained with fear and uncertainty; yet between the admirer and the admirer's admirer, she showed herself, and her manner was drawn in a firm, resolute line. The man was smiling, apparently well-satisfied with both himself and the situation.
This undersized man, with the slim, womanish hands, was Sir Ambrose Gervais, the famous all-ist, and in his sleek, pussy-cat way, a handsome, attractive personality, although a great shaggy, head and heavy mustache and soft purring voice appealed rather to women than to his own sex. A sudden crash of violins from the ball-room made Rosalie start, while her companion grew more assured. He had been waiting for the dancing to begin, and now he leaped a little nearer.
"Why did you give me this dance? Evidently not because you wish to dance, or you would not have asked me to stay out here."
The familiarity in his tone made her wince.
"No, I do not wish to dance," she said tentatively. She was at a loss how to begin.
The truth was that she would not have consented to dance, much less sit out with him, had he not asked her to recover the letters which she had written to him during their three weeks' engagement, and which he had not returned.
This engagement of Rosalie's had been entirely her mother's doing; and indeed, it was only the prospect of release from her mother's tongue and management that had induced her to engage herself to a man who had no other attraction for her than a charming manner and a famous name.
Sir Ambrose had asked her to try to learn to love him, and she had had nothing done for her but to return for his presents and attention. She had brought all her school-girl ingenuity and imagination to the task of writing those four letters; she had tried to make them as interesting as possible, and she had used many different pens, determined not to fall short of her duty. And now, whenever she remembered those letters, she blushed, and especially now that she was married, was she resolved to have them back.
Sir Ambrose had been piqued when she broke off the engagement, and had kept her letters out of spite; that being his way of making her feel some regret for jilting him.
He had been surprised to-night that she would dance with him at all; and now that she had asked him to sit out, she too affectionate soul began to hope that there might still be a corner of her heart reserved for himself. What other reason could there be? Evidently she was a coquette! He liked her, and he was sure that he guessed her reason for seeking this meeting; whereas the letters had not crossed his mind.
At last he leaned eagerly towards her, his soft eyes fixed on her, his heavy bosom, conquering his prudence.
"Come, Rosalie! Let us two talk of old times."
His ardent, assured tone soothed her.
"Oh, how dare you!" she said in a tense whisper, her eyes still fixed and staring in the gloom.
"Please!" she added stiffly.
But she made no attempt to leave him; she felt that she could not do so until her purpose was achieved. Besides, she was married, and she would not attempt any further familiarity. She did not know Sir Ambrose.
"I don't intend to forget the old days," he went on in a low, soft voice. "You will always be Rosalie to me. I shall never forget the happiness of our brief engagement—Rosalie."
He felt fairly sure of himself; she would have left him had she been really offended, he thought. He was an old hand at the game, and Rosalie would not be the first married woman who had been only too flattered to receive his attentions. She wanted a little humor, that was all, and she would make no reply, and that her face was once more fairly calm, he was encouraged to go on.
"Those were happy days, Rosalie, and your bringing me out here makes me begin to hope that, perhaps, they are not quite over."
For quite a time Rosalie did not reply, because she was afraid of what he might say, and she could not afford to offend him. So she sat there in silence, clenching her hands and waiting for the moment when she could wheedle him into returning her letters.
"We can still be friends," she said at last, forced herself to say, with a smile she could not feel. She did not look at him.
"Friendship is a hollow thing," said he. And then he sighed. "By your friendship is dearer to me than any other woman's love."
He turned to look into her eyes to complete her overthrow, but she happened to be looking the other way.
Despite Rosalie's intention to treat him tactfully, she found that she could not let this pass without protest. "Do you hope, Sir Ambrose, that I should be so foolish as to be deceived?" she said, her manner serious and dignified. "You know very well that I

NORTHCOTE ROAD MAINTENANCE.

WORKS FOR 1928-29
The Northcote council has agreed that the following works be carried out in 1928-29, the total amount of metal involved being 14,210 square yards, and that the question of the allotment of the balance of the metal estimated to be available (5,700 sq. yds.) be considered after an inspection by the Public Works Committee, viz.—

North Ward.—St. David St., Dennis to Darbin Sts., 3,640 sq. yds. South Ward.—Victoria Rd., West-garth St. to railway, 2,500 sq. yds. East Ward.—Derby St., Mitchell to Bastings Sts., 1,870 sq. yds. West Ward.—Hutton St., St. George's Rd. to Bullen's drain, 5,000 sq. yds. Central Ward.—Hawthorn Rd., St. George's Rd. half way to Hartington St., 1,200 sq. yds. Total—14,210 sq. yds.

That metal available (40,000 sq. yds.) for light sheeting works be appropriated as follows, and the order in which same are undertaken to be left in the hands of the surveyor, subject to it being clearly understood that not more than two streets in any one ward are to be re-metalled consecutively:—

North Ward.—Clarendon St., High St. to St. David St., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 700 sq. yds.; Station St., Darbin St. to boundary, scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 6,800 sq. yds.; St. David St., Clarendon St. to Flinders St., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 5,600 sq. yds.; St. David St., Flinders St. to Mansfield St., scarify and re-sheet about half length, 2,300 sq. yds.; total, 15,400 sq. yds.

South Ward.—Cain Ave., Simpson St. to Victoria Rd., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., re-grade near railway station entrance, and cut earth table drain on north side, 2,350 sq. yds.; South Crescent, Westgarth St. to Victoria Rd., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 8,000 sq. yds.; total, 10,350 sq. yds.

East Ward.—Mason St., Waterloo Rd. to Clarke St., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 2,500 sq. yds.; Main St., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 1,600 sq. yds.; Palmer St., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 830 sq. yds.; total, 3,360 sq. yds.

West Ward.—Emmaline St., St. George's Rd. to Leinster Gve., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 4,750 sq. yds.; Beaconsfield Pde., St. George's Rd. to Leinster Gve., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 4,050 sq. yds.; Smith St., High St. to Leinster Gve., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 5,700 sq. yds.; total, 13,500 sq. yds.

Central Ward.—Hartington St., Arthurton Rd. to Hawthorn Rd., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 2,500 sq. yds.; McCracken Ave., for about three-quarters length of street, 2,200 sq. yds.; Turnbull Gve., scarify and re-sheet, 2ins., 900 sq. yds.; total, 5,600 sq. yds.

Grand total—47,810 sq. yds.

Allocation of Motor Fees.

URBAN MUNICIPALITIES SEEK LARGER SHARE
At the meeting of the Northcote council on Monday a letter was received from the town clerk, City of Melbourne, secretary to a municipal conference, which met to discuss the allocation of revenue derived from registration of motor vehicles, stating that a deputation would wait on the Government, and that at least one-third of the revenue he made available for metropolitan municipalities.

Cr. Olver reported having attended the conference, and a strong case had been put up. About 70 per cent. of the motor fees were spent in the city areas, and about 70 per cent. of it was raised in the same areas. It was decided to hold a deputation to ask that one-third of the whole of the fees be allocated to metropolitan municipalities. The claim, he felt, was a just one, and the Government should be asked to consider the case for if money was taken away from country roads, the motorists would have to pay extra in some other way.

Cr. Dennis, in moving that the report be accepted and the proposal for metropolitan municipalities, stated that while the country boroughs and shires were getting these allocations a lot of the shires were working on a 1/6 rate, and were underpaid. In New Zealand, the district where the car owner lived got the advantage of the fees. Here the Government grabbed the whole of the money and doled it out to country shires. Yet the Government, in its wisdom, had the motorist, and refused to put on a shield tax. The Government, he felt, should tackle the problem in a just way.

Cr. Hayes seconded and said that he was perturbed that the Minister of Public Works had said he would raise another £40,000 by motor fees, and that most of it would go to suburban councils. When the council was making High St. it got an assurance that if any funds were available the Council would be recomposed. Then there was another aspect of taxation—the vast amount received by the Federal Government in taxation on petrol, of which none went to the State. Cr. Hayes suggested the continuation of taxes such as this should end somewhere, as it was a class-tax purely and simply.

Cr. Dennis said the C.R.B. had been doing good work for years with fees taken from motorists, and this made the roads usable. If the suburban municipalities got one-third of the motor fees they would be doing well.

Cr. McDonald said it was high time the suburban councils got some consideration re their arterial roads. The proposal to form a Greater Melbourne Council, he proposed, for a highways council had been dropped. The Northcote council would soon spend between £30,000 and £40,000 on the East side of High St., and if they could get anything from the Government towards this they should do so.

The report was received and the matter referred to the committee of the council.

THE COBBERS' CLUB
Dear Cobbers,—Did you have crackers and bonfires on Monday? It was Gay Fancies Day, and we had crackers. It was a surprise from grandma, and that makes me play on another. Throw-downs and double burgers made such a noise, and I had to go to bed for my own sake.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

OUR COBBERS
You are almost bound to catch your club with this. Place a brush on the table, and let it rest on the table.

A RECIPE
Six lightly sweet flour, four, sugar, butter, one egg, and a pinch of salt. Roll out thin cut into shapes and bake in a fairly hot oven.

HIDDEN ANIMALS
1. You must go at four o'clock.
2. Let us have a picnic at the beach.
3. He will go to his death or success.

RIDDLES
Why is there never such a thing as a whole day?—Because it begins by being divided.

Why is a false friend like the first?—Because, although the first is false, the second is true.

Why are old stockings like mice?—Because they are full of holes.

Why is a woman like a bicycle?—Because she is full of holes.

Why is a man like a bicycle?—Because he is full of holes.
